at the Australian Centre for Contemporary Art

at 7.30pm

Blue Funk is a media based group originating from Dublin, Ireland. Their work engages in an investigation and representation of various issues and concerns which have relevance beyond the confines of the gallery space. The group mantle operates less as an umbrella and more as a shared ground for further development, and because of this edgy coherence, establishes their work as a challenge to much contemporary art emerging from Ireland.

Their recent exhibition at Perth Institute of Contemporary Art engages with issues relating to the construction of culture and asks questions about the mythologies of 'centres' and peripheries. Blue Funk relate their questions to Edward Said's investigations into the fictions and oppressions of dominant culture and draw attention to the ways in which Irish culture has been subsumed by anglo-dominance and treated as trivial.
